Robbers use sexy women to lure men

By Vision Reporter

The Police have warned of a deadly gang of robbers who lure men using beautiful sexy women.

The Police are holding three people including a woman, suspected to be part of a racket that connives with the beautiful women to seduce men into sexual relationships and later extort money and other valuables from the victims.

According to the Uganda Police spokesperson, Asan Kasingye, the Police arrested three suspects who include a Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF) soldier, Julius Alinda, attached to the Marine Unit in Entebbe.

The others are Saddam Ayinamani and Brenda Nganzi.

The three, according to Kasingye, are suspected to be linked to the murder of a businessman, Edward Patrick Oseyike, whose body was dumped in Lake Rutoto in western Uganda.

The man, Victor Kibira, allegedly had a chat with Nganzi and they agreed to enter into a relationship.

"They chatted at length and exchanged phone contacts. They agreed to meet again," Kasingye explained, adding that when they next met, Nganzi was driving a vehicle, an X-Trail. The man went to the meeting place on a bodaboda.

Kibira allegedly joined Nganzi in the car and she drove him away heading to their rendezvous for a date.

Before arriving at the hideout, two men, unknown to Kibira, and were allegedly hiding in the back seat. They grabbed Kibira and tied him. They allegedly tortured him demanding money.

According to the Police, Kibira was dumped within Entebbe municipality, where Good Samaritans found him and took him to hospital where he has been undergoing treatment.

Kibira reported the matter to the Police, who arrested the three suspects.

The Police also recovered the car that Nganzi was allegedly driving when she picked Kibira.

It was discovered the car, according to the Police, belonged to Oseyike, who was murdered and his body dumped in Lake Rutoto.

"We investigated this murder (of Oseyike), but his killers remained at large. This new lead will help our investigations into his case as well," he said.

Kasingye added that the Police recovered Oseyike's cell phone and it allegedly contained a photo of Nganzi in its photo gallery.

Now the Police suspect that the group could have lured other victims in the same way.

"We want to warn the public, especially men, about this wave of robbery where men use beautiful women to trap their victims. Do not accept to offer a lift to any woman you may not know," Kasingye said.
