Set up medical arbitration board to address workers plight

The workers Compensation Act 2006, calls for the establishment of a medical arbitration board to help resolve/mediate on issues of medical disagreements between employers and employees as far as compensation is concerned. However, eight months after the expiry of the term of the old board, there is still no new board in place.

I have witness affected employees pacing up and down the corridors of the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development to have their cases resolved in vain. The answer they always get is that the Ministry of Health has not yet seconded doctors to sit on this board and have workers issues resolved. However, the question is, for how long will desperate workers before the board is reconstituted and have their benefits paid?

This has in a way denied people justice yet justice delayed is justice denied. Some employees have taken their case to court though they are waiting for the medical reports from this board. Its important to note that some employees are in urgent need of their workers compensation, which will be of use to them to access better medical treatment as well as fend for their families. This, therefore, is to request the ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development ministry to urgently address this issue as many workers are suffering.
