

Address poor performance of schools in rural areas

Government has failed to help village schools improve on performance. The performance of these schools is very poor every year when it comes to national examinations. Sadly, even parents don't do much to encourage their children to perform better. Some don't even bother to feed them with decent meals.

These schools need help from the government. They should be provided with well-trained teachers in order to improve performance. It is government's role to come up with laws that ensure that teachers with no qualifications are not allowed to teach. Obviously qualified teachers are hesitant about working in these schools because of the poor working conditions.

Government should therefore improve remuneration and give teachers other incentives to go to these schools.

Sumayiya Nalugoda, nalugodasumayiya@gmail.com

Comments from our readers >

With Stephen Otaga

I know the g dates e various
?

the presidenti