

I never miss New Vision's education guides – Bitamazire

By Conan Businge

The former education minister, Geraldine Namirembe Bitamazire, says she never misses a chance to read New Vision's education guides and encourages parents and teachers to make use of the opportunity.

Next week on November 8, New Vision will publish the Early Learning Guide for the fourth year running.

"Good parents and teachers need to secure their copies to guide their children well," she says.

Counting on the newspaper's experienced team of writers and editors, New Vision pioneered the publication of several education guides. These include the University Guide, Schools Guide, International Schools Guide and the Vocational Studies Guide.

"It is very good to have responsible media houses which are concerned about the country's education. New Vision has done a tremendous job over the years on producing great education guides,"

■ The New Vision pioneered the publication of several guides, namely, the university, schools, international schools and the vocational guides.

Bitamazire said.

"It (New Vision) has for years been telling our teachers, parents and stakeholders the truth about education in this country. It has made sure that we always know what is going on in our education system. This makes it the best authority on an education guide for toddlers," she said.

The former education minister added: "I love reading Mwalimu (education pullout in New Vision) and Essomero (education pullout in Bukedde newspaper). I never miss these special guides on education."

Speaking about early childhood education, the state minister for higher education Dr John Muyingo, said: "Children are what you make them. What you do to prepare them in their first five years of learning will greatly influence their future. This is more reason why New Vision's nursery (early learning) guide is a good publication for any concerned parent."

The nursery guide will provide well-researched information on the importance of early learning, as well as a platform for providers of kindergarten education and related services to showcase their facilities, services and products.

The free copy of the guide will demonstrate the central role kindergarten education plays in setting a strong foundation for a child's academic journey.

It will also provide information on education insurance and savings, minimum benchmarks for a good kindergarten and the issues parents should consider in choosing a learning centre for their children.

The guide will provide an opportunity to service providers and suppliers of children related products to advertise their offers.
