

Same fit, different day: Would you repeat an outfit after posting it online?

BY PATRICK SSENTONGO

From TikTok fit checks to Instagram photo dumps, social media has changed the way many young people think about fashion. For some, repeating an outfit online is completely normal. For others, the pressure to always appear in something new remains real. Teens Buzz spoke to some students of Standard High School Zzana to find out whether they would confidently repeat an outfit after posting it online.

I think many teenagers fear repeating outfits because of online comments, but personally I do not mind. What matters is being smart and comfortable. People should focus more on confidence than trying to satisfy social media.

Antonia Nsekuye, S.6

I think young people today are under too much fashion pressure because of social media. Personally, I would repeat an outfit proudly because clothes do not lose value after one photo. Fashion should reflect personality, not pressure.

Suzan Niwamanya, S.6

Sometimes people feel shy repeating outfits after posting pictures online, but I think confidence is more important. Many dress more for photos than for themselves.

Catherine Kebirungi, S.4

Yes, I can repeat it because clothes are meant to be worn many times. Social media should not make people feel pressured.

Lizzie Nsekuye, S.4

I can repeat an outfit but maybe style it differently. You can change shoes, hairstyles, or accessories and still make the same clothes look new. Fashion is also about creativity and personal expression.

Ali Widad Mariam, S.6

I believe repeating outfits is normal. Even celebrities repeat clothes sometimes. What matters most is cleanliness, neatness, and how you carry yourself. Young people should not feel embarrassed about wearing clothes more than once.

Anita Komuhendo, S.6

I would definitely repeat an outfit. I believe fashion is about how you style yourself and not how many clothes you own. If I like an outfit and feel confident in it, I can wear it again.

Faith Mwebesa, S.6

Yes, I would repeat it. Fashion should not become competition. Not everyone can afford new outfits all the time and there is nothing wrong with wearing your favourite clothes again.
