Make education more practical

According to research, the rate of unemployment in Uganda is so high and we attribute this not only to the lack of job opportunities but also to the system of education in Uganda.

Most universities in our country teach and spend a lot of time on theory more than on practical subjects.

This has weakened the thinking capacity of students to the extent that they only think of working in offices yet in actual sense they should be taught to be job creators or to go out to the field. Due to this situation many people, especially the youth, have ended up jobless.

We need to see change in everything including the system of education in our country.

We call upon the government that is and will be in power to improve our education system.

Walter Karamagi