

Let's be realistic

Reading your columnist Timothy Kalyegira's column, Final word on 2016 campaigns, and other past columns, I notice that he has a habit of harping about the same thing over and over. How many Ugandans does he think can use, let alone afford his social media and IT? The kind of things he wishes for Uganda are so unrealistic.

Who said campaigns must conform to his idea of how campaigns are run in the West? Hasn't he seen or heard some of the very daft and dumb things some of the candidates in the US presidential primaries have been saying, even though they might use Twitter? Election issues vary, and Uganda has got its unique ones, and the points need to be put simply in the way the ordinary person, and not your tech-savvy pretenders understand.

Geoffrey Buga