

CONNIE NANKYA
cnankyam@gmail.com

Anti when it's a rich
gang party,
you have to wear all the Gucci you
own. lol

connie's tiffs >

But how do we have the same tragedies every year?

And then the same cliché news about girls being abused at most of the famous beaches during the festive season hits the airwaves.

Oba we are getting sick and tired of people who never learn their lessons. It's like something wrong has to first happen before the lessons are learnt, as if experience is the best teacher for many people.

Like seriously, every year such headlines never miss out. I mean, the updates about how girls are drugged and abused as they celebrate the festive season, mainly at crowded beach events have become part of annual news. So one wonders. Why is it that such vices are not wiped out by the potential victims themselves? Is it that people do not read news to pick the lessons or should we just say their minds are too forgetful?

What is so annoying is that it is always girls within the same age bracket, social class being abused. How about such people just realised that hanging out in crowded places without any form of control exposes them to the worst? What gives a girl in her teenage years the courage to think and believe that they can exist in such crowded places filled with all sorts of hooligans and survive the pain that comes with it all? Aren't these children monitored? Do they come from homes or they just dash out of nowhere and fall prey to waiting "hungry lions"?

Some people just do not learn. It is such people that keep making it hard for others to move on past certain situations as history seems to repeat itself annually. The fact remains that one can still have fun without exposing themselves to danger. So when choosing plot this time round, it should be clean, safe plot. Avoid these things of diving into things fwaa. It is absurd and annoying!

In the end, a word to a wise is enough. But again, we can only say much but can never have control over one's life and movements so talking and placing all facts at the table is just as far as we can go and hope that those who have ears will listen and those who have eyes will see. For those who have failed to learn lessons, guess experience will teach you. Let us all just happen responsibly by doing what is right. It is as simple as that.

Be safe and have a Happy New Year!