

Don't miss nursery guide, Kigozi urges parents

By Victoria Nampala

Maggie Kigozi, a renowned medical doctor and business consultant, has urged parents not to miss this year's Nursery Guide.

"It will be unfair for any parent to miss New Vision's Nursery Guide since it is always packed with worthwhile information."

Kigozi is famous for her contribution to the running of the Uganda Investment Authority between 1999 and 2011 as executive director.

New Vision will on Wednesday run a Nursery/Early Learning Guide.

Commenting about the pullout, she said: "Paying attention to kindergarten education sets pace for your child's future. But how will you achieve this as a parent if you are not well-informed? This guide comes as an opportunity for you as a teacher and parent."

Kigozi, who is a consultant at the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation said: "Fellow parents at all levels of education should not miss the chance of this free copy of the guide in New Vision. I have read it before and I know it is always worth your time."

Parents will also be guided on nutrition issues of their children.

"Headteachers need to also buy the newspaper and file these guides in their school libraries," she adds.

New Vision has pioneered the publication of several guides in Uganda. These include the University Guide, Schools Guide, International Schools Guide and the Vocational Guide.

The pullout will provide well-researched information on the importance of early learning as well as a platform for providers of kindergarten education and related services to showcase their facilities and services.

The free copy of the guide will demonstrate the central role kindergarten education plays in setting a strong foundation for a child's academic journey.

It will also provide information on education insurance and savings, minimum benchmarks for a good kindergarten and the issues parents should consider in choosing a learning centre for their children.
