KAMPALA. The Indian High Commission in Uganda on Monday issued an advisory urging its nationals to take caution in the wake of heightening political activity.

A statement issued by the High Commission indicated that already one Indian national, a resident of Namuwongo, a Kampala suburb, was injured last week during one of the political processions in the capital and had been flown abroad for specialised treatment.

"Following the heightened political activity in Uganda, and particularly in certain parts of Kampala, all members of Indian community are advised to take careful note of areas with heightened political activity over the next few days."

The statement, copied to all heads of Indian community associations in Uganda, further advised Indian nationals to avoid areas of campaigning, and in cases of emergency to immediately contact the High Commission.
