Attendees at this year's Harvest Money Expo that happened from February 27 to March 1 at Kololo Independence Grounds, Kampala, walked away with more than the usual displays and demonstrations. They received firsthand insights from the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Industry and Fisheries (MAAIF) technical officers on how the government is guiding farmers toward a more profitable and business-oriented agriculture sector.

At the centre of this engagement was Consolata Acayo, the assistant commissioner for communications at MAAIF, who explained that the ministry's participation was designed to bring services closer to the people.

She said the expo allowed farmers to interact face-to-face with technical officers, researchers and project managers who implement agricultural programmes across the country.
